Slue-Foot Sue - Disney Wiki

Riding that catfish was the prettiest girl Bill had ever seen. "That's the girl I'm going to marry," Bill said to himself. And he just about did. The girl's name was Slue-Foot Sue. She lived with her mother and father up on Pinnacle Mountain. Sue was one determined young lady, and one thing she decided was that she could do everything a cowman could do.

Pecos Bill and Slue-Foot Sue

Shake, Widow-Maker, and Slue-Foot Sue are as idealized as Pecos Bill. After a courtship in which, among other things, Pecos Bill shoots all the stars from the sky except for one which becomes the Lone Star, Pecos proposes to Sue. She insists on riding Widow-Maker before, during or after the wedding (depending on variations in the story).

Everyone gasped, but Slue-Foot Sue just let out a cowboy yell. "Eeeyoowww - the greatest cowboy bride for the greatest cowboy in the world," she sang, and swung her hat around her head. Sue's nervous mother fainted from the shock, and Bill flew to her side.

PECOS BILL AND SLUE-FOOT SUE - Deseret News

Slue-Foot Sue was the prettiest girl this side of the Mississippi River. Her hair was as golden as Kansas wheat. Her cheeks were as rosy as an Arizona sunset. Now Pecos Bill had never felt the slightest fear when riding an angry bull or facing a nest full of rattlers. But moseying up to Slue-Foot Sue to say hello made Bill more nervous than a jackrabbit in a wolf den.
