It's easy to give paper documents a bad rap, but it's not always deserved. Sometimes a hard copy makes more sense. A detailed or complicated document is often easier to read, pass around and make notes on if it's printed, says Paige Goff, vice president of sustainability and business communications with Domtar Paper in Fort Mill, SC. A printed document can sometimes be more easily shared if you're disseminating information to a large group of people at the same time.
