For example, some records managers in public sector organisations recommend keeping an employee's records until they reach the age of 100, especially for pension purposes. Employers should always review the length of time personal data is kept, consider its purpose when deciding how long to retain it, and update, archive or securely delete information if it goes out of date.

Excerpt from Selections From the Records of the Regality of Melrose and From the Manuscripts of the Earl of Haddington, Vol. 3: 1547-1706 The present volume contains the remaining manuscripts of the Court Books and Rolls of the Regality of Melrose, formerly in the possession of Mr. James Curie of Priorwood, and now deposited in the General Register House, Edinburgh; an abridgment of a volume of the hornings and inhibitions relating to the regality, and a rental of the abbey lands about the year 1564, both preserved in the Register House; transcripts and abridgments of valuable manuscripts relating to the Abbey in the possession of the Earl of Haddington, and some charters and other documents in the possession of the Earl of Lauderdale, Lord Binning, Mr. Thomas J. S. Roberts of Drygrange, and Mr. Curie. The Editor in submitting these documents has been compelled through want of space to abandon his original intention of giving a somewhat detailed history of the lands and landowners within the bounds of the Regality, but the series of charters now printed and the accompanying footnotes will supply much of what would otherwise have found a place in these introductory pages. The Chartularies of the Earl of Haddington are practically a continuation of the Liber de Melros, and demonstrate the dissipation of the Church lands by the commendators, abbots, and monks of Melrose before and at the time of the Reformation. They comprise grants relating to estates in Ayrshire and Dumfriesshire as well as the lands of the Regality in Roxburghshire.
